

LIVING

Art exhibit will play 'Africa' by Toto down in Africa forever

By Christian Gollayan

January 14, 2019 | 5:21pm | Updated

TRENDING NOW
ON NYPOST.COM

101,633

Feds probing AOC's chief of staff after shock resignation

43,219

Sick manifesto linked to Walmart shooting suspect blames 'Hispanic invasion'

34,708

invasion'

34,708

Haunting CCTV shows gunman enter Walmart with assault rifle

MORE ON:

MORE ON:
AFRICA
'Serengeti' offers stunning, emotional look at African wildlife
How smoke from fires in Africa help keep the Amazon rainforest alive
South Sudan tries to protect wildlife after long conflict
Chains, shackles, auction docs: remnants of the Africa to North America slave trade

Toto's "Africa" is one of the most streamed songs in the world. Now, you can listen to it on repeat at the Toto's "Africa" is one of the most streamed songs in the world. Now, you can listen to it on repeat at the world's oldest desert.

Max Siedentopf, an artist from Namibia, recently set up a solar-powered sound installation in Namib Desert that plays the 1982 hit on repeat. He told the BBC that the solar batteries will keep the song going forever.

"[I] wanted to pay the song the ultimate homage and physically exhibit 'Africa' in Africa," Siedentopf, 27, told the BBC. "Some [Namibians] love it and some say it's probably the worst sound installation ever. I think that's a great compliment."

His installation features six speakers that are wired to an MP3 file of the track.

"Most parts of the installation were chosen to be as durable as possible, but I'm sure the harsh environment of the desert will devour the installation eventually," he said.

And while he placed his art in an undisclosed area in the 55-million-year-old desert, he hopes "Africa" plays for another 55 million years.

NOW ON Page Six

Stars relax on boat on gas-guzzling trip to Google's climate summit
Heidi Klum and Tom Kaulitz marry for the second time in Italy
FILED UNDER AFRICA, ARTISTS, MEMES, MUSICIANS, THE 80S